MISS JORDAN'S 4-H CLUB

On Thursday, Nov. 6, 1975, Miss Jordan's 6th grade 4-H Club met for their November 4-H meeting. The club said the pledges to the American Flag and 4-H Flag. The recreation leaders, Ken Caldwell and Lynn Gordon, led us in a game. Afterwards, project books were passed out by President Janet Clements. The committee chairmen gave us their committee reports.

The class did different activities on the bicentennial. The first activity was poems. The best two were Denise Jackson and Carolyn Morgan. The second activity was drawings. The best two drawings were done by Warren Baldwin and Wendy Harris. The third group brought in antiques. Doug Franklin brought in a letter from the Revolutionary War period. The fourth and final activity was a report on churning butter.

The program for this month was by Mrs. Shirley Walton, Extension Agent, on Christmas Arts and Crafts.

The meeting was then adjourned.

By Verna Conner

In Sunday's Lynchburg News there was an article with this heading - - Read to Children, Professor Urges. I shall take the liberty of quoting her in the next few paragraphs.

Among other things she says, "Parents who turn off television sets and "turn on" their children to books are taking a major step toward developing a life-long bond between parent and child."

Mrs. Richard Delaune, assistant professor of education at the College of William and Mary says parents should make an effort to interest their children in books and she adds that the sooner the better. She estimates that she reads from 300 to 500 children's books each year. She says that parents should not force their children to read as this would make them hate it but should set the example and most young children will get in the habit of reading and this will be of inestimable value to them in later life.

Another thing she stresses is helping the child to choose good books. Usually the child looks for the same qualities that his parents look for and if the parent reads trash the child will eventually follow his example. She urges parents to keep reading to their children even though they are capable of reading themselves. This forms a close bond between mother and father and child and talking over the story helps to clarify it for the child.

One of the books I read last week was entitled, Saint of the Wilderness by Jess Carr. It is the story of the life and works of Robert Sayers Sheffey. I don't think you will find it in the library as it was loaned to me by my pastor, Robert Sheffey said he was not a preacher but an exhorter for his "Sweet Lord" rode on horseback all over the country doing what he knew the Lord wanted him to do. He had two of the best wives any man could have but with all his traveling he outlived them both. They believed in his work and seemed willing to stay at home and take care of the children and make-do on what little people gave him. He loved the camp meeting and worried himself sick because the modern church did not want it. Parts of the book are very humorous, especially when he tries to tell his hostess how to cook. He wanted his biscuits very brown and he wanted a white counterpane on his bed and other things which would have made some people angry but just amused the ones who loved him. A most interesting book. Read it.

Thank you for telling me you missed by letter while I was sick. It makes me very humble to know I have so many friends.
